THE TARIFF.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 1.—[Special.]—It is not possible to say whether there will be any attempt to organize a congress of the tariff reformers of this country, though some of the friends of revision say that it is necessary to assess the position, where more than it would be better for the Democrats to permit this when the next administration is sure to take control. The most prominent Democrats in the country of the recommendation of Secretary Carlisle, and not into a free system. One of the Democratic members who has long been connected to revision said:

"I do not want to see it in a free trade thing for the Democrats at this short session to attempt to revise the tariff in connection with the very natural recommendations of a Republican Secretary of the Treasury. It is the last act of the Congress and of the administration. There is not time to attempt a permanent revision, and, for that matter, there seems to be no reason why we should attempt to do a necessarily hazardous thing."

The opinions of the prominent politicians here upon this subject are perhaps well illustrated by a statement of Senator Vest of Missouri, to-day:

"I don't think Senator Gorman's views are of any importance one way. He is always a lobbyist. The country will get enough of free trade in the next four years, whether it comes from any party in the Democratic, Republican or Populist ranks."

Whether the Democrats shall commence to pick away tariff schedules bit by bit, in order to facilitate matters, or avoid a general debate upon the tariff question, this was to be left upon the Democratic caucus next session. This conference will be held in the Senate chamber, and will be composed of the Democratic members of both houses of Congress. It is generally assumed by most of the Democrats that no bill will be reported to the Senate, from the Committee on Finance, which does not harmonize with the administration. The Senate Democratic caucus has always been guided by the Democratic members of the Committee on Finance, and in

After Desperate Struggle Jesse Hall Wounds to Death an Officer Little.

He Insists that His Uncle Knew Every Step Engineered by Outgoing Detectives.

Sacramento, Cal., Dec. 4.—[Special.]—The pursuit of the famous band of bandits in the Grass Valley has been dropped for the present, four men of the party having been killed and the other two, who formerly the party, and a companion, having made off in the hills. The leader of the band, Jesse Hall, the second captain, a correspondent of the Press who returned from that section today and who knows Hall well, reports as follows:

Hall's uncle, Mr. Wright, was seen by a Press reporter and asked if he knew anything about the [illegible] of his nephew. He replied: "I have not seen Jesse for [illegible] years. In the Senate yesterday Mr. Vest offered a resolution directing an investigation into all the cases of land in Indian Territory by Indian tribes. After a long debate the matter went over until today. In another place will be found the popular vote for President as carefully ascertained through The Tribune correspondents from the courts of the official canvass throughout the Union. With Cleveland by a mere minority in the State of New York the official figures show that Mr. Tilden has received a plurality over Cleveland on the popular vote of 3,742. The total vote of 1884 is 10,051,-946. That of 1885 was 9,610,914, showing an increase for 1884 of 440,932.

David Dudley Field's suit against C. P. Huntington, et al. (Central Pacific Railroad magnate), for the recovery of certain shares of Union Pacific stock which Huntington is alleged to have acquired from Stewart by improperly pooling the business of the company and the value of the stock, was begun yesterday in the Supreme Court at New York. Justice H. Chester, one of Stewart's counsel, made some very disfavorable statements concerning the Central Pacific, Union Pacific, and Southern Pacific Railroads, and their management. Judge Gaynor is one of the lawyers on the other side. The case will probably occupy days in the trial.

Gen. Sherman is not only behaving in a commendable fashion, but, as we believe, in a thoroughly lawful (though not, while he holds the office of General of the Army, a wise) manner. The Governing Board took the stand positive that it must refuse anything protesting to be an election return which might come into its possession, provided there were no other returns before it. Gen. Sherman concurring this stand kept it by the rule. He denies that the genuine returns were before the Cook County Board, and asserts that the proof of a miserable forgery was complete. The evidence did not satisfy, he says, were both present to such strength as to force the mind to conclude beyond any reasonable doubt that a great crime on the rights of the people had been committed.

He says further that it was fairly shown, that the Cook County canvassers erected a fraudulent and forged return, and that the district of the votes sent up to the State Canvassing Board was an abstract of fraudulent and forged returns so far as the Second Precinct of the Eighteenth Ward was concerned. He refers further to decisions of the Supreme Court of Illinois to the effect that the Canvassing Board must in every case determine for itself whether the papers transmitted to it are, within the law, returns of an election. The canvassers must be satisfied that they are genuine. The question in this instance, the Governor decides, is not one of going behind the returns. It is a question of finding out what the true and genuine returns are.

This is the whole case in a nutshell. The proposition laid down by the Governor is so plain and irrefutable that we are surprised it did not address itself to the intelligence of the Canvassing Board in Cook County. There is nothing else in his case. It is simply a question whether, where a palpable forgery has been committed, the proofs of fraud shall have, with a Canvassing Board, the force of a positive return.

Mr. Randall's address to the Democracy of Lemon, which we print in full elsewhere, is a very manly and sensible document, and we hope it will be perused carefully not only by those who have been concerned in the attempt to give Mr. Brand a seat in the State Senate by forging election returns and stuffing ballot-boxes, but by all citizens who are interested in preserving the purity of our election system. The Governor reviews the facts in the case fairly and moves to the conclusion that he is in duty bound to issue a certificate of election to Mr. Lemon.

We are glad to see that he takes broad and commendable ground. He does above the mere technicalities of the case, and holds that both the Governing Boards—of Cook County and the State at large—were in duty bound to determine what were the genuine returns presented to them from the Second Precinct of the Eighteenth Ward. It is both good law and good sense to maintain that a canvassing board has the power to determine for itself whether the terms of law have in all cases been complied with and whether the returns submitted to it are in fact what they purport to be. In the present instance it was sufficiently apparent to all the members of the Cook County Canvassing Board that a brazen forgery had been committed in the Second Precinct of the Eighteenth Ward, and that the returns produced before them had been grossly falsified. They got only half the right to their action in the falsification of these returns and the probable nature of the true ones, but they were entirely bound to both these proper inquiries on both these points. The Canvassing Board took the stand positive that it must refuse anything protesting to be an election return which might come into its possession, provided there were no other returns before it. Gen. Sherman concurring this stand kept it by the rule. He denies that the genuine returns were before the Cook County Board, and asserts that the proof of a miserable forgery was complete. Fighting for Adventure in the Dark Continent—Progress of the Panama Canal.

OUR CABLE LETTER.

LONDON, Dec. 1.—[Special.]—Mr. Parnell, having completed his arrangements and carefully studied the Government's new Redistribution bill, has decided to reluctantly support that measure. He is apparently delighted with the plan for giving the larger cities and the counties by two Parliamentary districts, single-member districts, instead of the present system of electing all the members in each borough and county at large, on a general ticket. But Parnell says that this is going to cost him and Gladstone's party a great deal, for the city of Dublin will be cut down from four members to two, and the Irish party will be compelled to surrender three seats. Mr. Parnell says that he prefers to lose only two Nationalist members, rather than three, while they would not object to certain Irish cities. They will also have no serious prospect of trouble in districts which are largely peopled by the Irish, although the Irish vote would be largely swamped in an election which was general throughout the city. Mr. Parnell hopes to carry at least eight seats for the party in the cities of England and Scotland at the next general election, in consequence of the addition of these cities into large districts. He also succeeds himself, although the question of representation is not increased. His party expects to be able to elect a large proportion of them through the division of the vote in the cities and the influence of the Caucuses in securing votes.

CLARENCE DILLON IN THE CORRIDOR.

The passage of the Redistribution bill, several leaders' opposition, is now a foregone conclusion. The Liberals are loyal to their pledges of Mr. Gladstone's last, by which he has not only forced the Lords to agree to the principle of accepting the Franchise, but has practically the power of the redistribution proposition now in the Tory ranks to make the effort impracticable.

Sir Andrew Jackson Rogers, late of the Civil Service, who made investment in the London Bankruptcy Court today. Sir Rogers admits that if he had been able to keep on with the pleasures enjoyed which he was trying to enjoyment in London he would have made himself but himself quit all the parties who accepted, but he found that $1,000 and had no money. Some of the creditors objected to have the examination conducted privately, as they feared that the withdrawal would confirm the rule of the newspapers to which they were indebted, and they would then be withdrawn from the Bankruptcy.
